No one believes in a real God, unless No one believes in a real God, unless he believes in an actual governor, as well as creator, of the worlds. The theory that God tied himself hand and foot with his own "laws," virtually abdicating in their favor as to so many little gods, is the feeblest kind of pantheism. Even though it could be shown (as is assumed by the whole corpse of question-beggars) that he has never interposed, and never will, for the temporary arrest of any law —in other words, changing for the time the mode of his working, for that is all which divine law can mean to any one but an atheist-it were absurd to suppose that one, who is as omniscient as he is omnipotent, could not frame his plan of the universe so as to include in the undisturbed operation of his laws all which he desired to bring about. Or, if you please, he who had evolved this "universally frame" out of a germinal cell could involve in that cell every foreseen event —including all that lies within the narrow scope of the human will, and all that would enable him to guarantee the answer of believing and righteous pray-er. And "every foreseen event," with

God, means everything whatsoever! We know at least that he has made provisions for the interplay of our will—free, and even fickle as it seems to be -with his own, and for the interposition of our most sudden and random action into the working out of his fixed purpose. This is one of the most familiar facts of observation, and most notable lessons of history. The greatest events, the entire course of this world, have turned upon the most trival incidents-accidents we call them in our current speech. It has been wittily said that if Cleopatra's nose had been the eigh h of one inch longer, the Augustan age of Rome would never have dawned; there would never, in fact, have been a Roman world. Chatham's gout, which mounted to his brain during the critical juncture when the Tea Duties bill was passed, may easily have given us our Fourth of July. Kinglake gravely attributes the invasion of the Crimea to the fact that the Duke of Newcastle read his dispatch to Lord Ragland to the Cabinet immediately after they had dined (and wined?) together and were in a comatose state. Napoleon is said to have made his fatal blunder in assuming the offensive at Leipsic, while suffering from indigestion arising from a surfeit of mutton and onions. There is great reasons to suppose that his nephew would never have allowed him to be pushed into the German war, but for a wasting disease which rendered him no longer the cool, clear headed and selfpoised man of former years. Let me append two or three illustra-tions drawn from my recent reading in American history. The political prestige and ultimate pre-eminence of Thomas Jefferson were largely due to his authorship of, and consequent identification with, the Declaration of Independence.

His writing of that document arose from his being the Chairman of the committee, and his chairmanship was an "accident"

since the place would naturally have been assigned to Richard Henry Lee, who moved the appointment of a committee to draft such a paper, but who was called away by the illness of his wife. The "Louisiana Purchase," which secured for us the continent from ocean to ocean, "the largest transaction in real estate that the world has ever known," was only possible by its having been negotiated under a singular conjunction of circumstances, which existed for that brief space of time, and never before or since. These were : the ab olute and ar bitrary power of the young Napoleon; his pressing need just then of ready money, and the large financial credit of the United States at Amsterdam; the gen-eral ignorance of the extent or possibilities of the domain; the willingness of Spain to give up New Orleans, and the determination of France that Great Britain should not have it; the anxiety of England to check the growing empire of Napoleon, and the desire of France dan do dominecker hen, but she ain't haf so good ter hab aroun' de house. single will, which then happened to be France! and President Gilman well says: "The mighty deeds of Napoleon's sword have been undone; but the stroke of his pen wrought a change which now, after four-score years have passed, is no more liable to counterchange than the Mississippi is to flow into the lakes." It is worth our while to quote further his suggestive remarks. "The Missouri compromise, the annexation of Texas, the Northwestern boundary disputes, the acquisition of California and of the Northern providences of Mexico the dis-covery of gold and silver, the Nebraska bill, the Mormon difficulty, the Indian policy, the Alaska purchase, the Pacific Railroad, the Isthmus Canal question, the Chinese immigration-who can say that any of these controversics and events would ever have come to the front, if Spain or Great Britain had remained which lies beyond the Mississippi.' If a human will can have such shaping of the world's history and the destinies of men, what may not the will of the Almighty and all-wise God effect? Who at least, shall make the shallow denial of a special providence?

in control of that half of our domain

A suggestive illustration occurs in the life of Alexander Hamilton, showing that it was due to his own stubborn and arbitrary will that Aaron Burr was elevated to prominence and importance as his rival in Net. York, and ultimately in national politics. In the election of the first U. S. Senator from New York, Hamilton named Go. Schwiler. Hamilton named Gen. Schuyler as one, with universal consent. But instead of leaving the other Senator to the choice of the party, he insisted on the election of Rufus King, a Massachusetts man, just come down into the State. This act just come down into the State. This act alionated a large element of the Federalists, especially the powerful Livingston family, who immediately took up the brilliant and yet undetected Burr, and in two years started him on a national career by sending him to the U.S. Senate. This was the beginning of Hamilton's many complications and collusions in political life with that bold, bad man, and ultimately of his death at his hands, involving, perhaps, the fall of the Fedinvolving, perhaps, the fall of the Federal party. These cases, it must not be overlooked aleo, have their bearing upon the possi-ble efficacy of prayer in influencing the course of events. For if the expression of one man's desire to other men may alter the whole history and map of the world, what potentiality may there not be in the expression of a man's desire to

A great many lessons will doubtless be drawn from the life of Luther, in this four hundredth year of his birth. But nothing can be more striking and sugges-tive than the lesson of Providence, whereby the Hour and the Man were in such remarkable conjunction at his nativity. I have not the space now to point out any of the numerous facts in demonstration of this. I only venture to use a single incident for the purpose of illustrating, in a sort of allegorical way, the interpositions of Providence in the lives or individuals. It is familiar to us all how, on his way home from the Diet of Worms, he was seized by a band of mask-ed and armed men and carried off to the castle of Wartburg, amid the rocks and glens of the Thuringian Forest, disappearing from sight for ten months. It was doubtless against his own earnest protest and frequent change of spirit, and to the dismay of those who trusted that it was he who should have saved the cause of religious liberty and purity.

But he learned ere long that the brigands were friends in disguise, and that their design was his protection from perils, which had to be slunned for a season rather than faced. And we know now that no ten months of Luther's life were more fruitful of good to the world and of furtherance to the cause of Protestantsm. No equal period of his life could, in fact, be less easily spared. For it was there that he translated the Bible into his native tongue, thereby laying the foundation of his Reformation on the simple word of God and at the same time fixing forever the literary dialect of Germany, as Wickliffe fixed the speech of England by his Bible.

How often is it so in Christian lives, in the very proportion in which they are carnest, and feel themselves strong to do the Lord's work. We seem to be over-powered and turned aside, perhaps laid aside, from the path which we had proposed to serve him. And we are slow o believe that our retirement and seeming retreat is only into the secret place of the Most High, where it is our privilege to abide under the shadow of the Almighty; that these "adverse circumstances" are the friendly agents of his providence; and that what he designs by them is, at one and the same time, our Protection and our Opportunity.

The First Baby.

The first baby is the signal of victory in the household of every well-regulated cultivator in the baby vineyard. It is the first call to active double duty. The parent that has his front yard paved with children does not borrow trouble like the man that is experiencing for the first time the exultant glee of a newly-elected father. It is usua, y in the night when he has hastily to jump into pants and red flannel shirts and scoots for the family physician. He wears good clothes him-elf but there is not enough baby clothes in the house to wad a shot gun. He makes a start for his wife's mother who comes to the rescue. Then he hunts all over town for a nurse, and is just about to give up in despair when a drunken foreign woman comes to his relief and for three prices agrees to assist him out of his dilemma. Then he makes half hourly trips to the drug store, and wonders if it wouldn't be cheaper to move the apothecary shop into his house and save sole leather. All of his old friends congratulate him, and joke him while his young lady acquaintances snicker at his discomfiture. He fee's faint and sorrowful. He has not seen the little cherabin yet, and when the nurse brings in a little bundle of canton flanuel rags and gently lays it in his lap he doesn't know whether to run or to scream right out. He becomes familiarized to the situation and tries to hold the infant, but displays a grace more painful than posing upon a bed of thorns. H says "tootsy wootsy" and tries to dandle t upon his knee and has it taken from him by the nurse who is frightened at his display of dense ignorance upon the baby question. In his mind he sees ruin staring him in his ten-dollars-a-week countenance, and he wonders what on earth is going to happen next to mar his interest in life. The first baby grows up to be a strapping big child, and it has been petted and indulged until it rules the roost. When it issues a command the volunteer must obey or there is war to the spinal column. After the first-born, men are not such fools over t'eir progeny. -- Chicago Check.

BUCKINGHAM WHISKEY A REALLY PURE STIMULANT.

THIS WHISKEY is controlled entirely by VENABLE & HEYMAN, New York. It is distilled in Maryland in the slate water regions of that State from the small grain grown there. The distillation is superintended by a gentleman who thoroughly understands his business.

Nothing deleterious is permitted to enter into its composition, and none of it is allowed to be sold until fully three years old, in order that it may be entirely free by evaporation from fusel oil. Venable & Heynnan offer these goods as perfectly pure, to fill a long felt want for medical purposes. It is their own brand, and they stake their reputation on the truth of this assertion.

many people are doing. They don't know just what is the matter, but they have a combination of pains and aches, and each month they grow worse.

The only sure remedy yet found is Brown's on BITTERS, and this by rapid and thorough assimilation with the blood purifies and enriches it, and rich, strong blood flowing to every part of the system repairs the wasted tissues, drives out disease and gives health and strength.

This is why Brown's IRON BITTERS will cure kidney and liver diseases, consumption, rheumatism, neuralgia, dyspepsia, malaria, intermittent fevers, &c.

Mr. Simon Blanchard, a well-known citizen of Hayesville, Meade county, Kentucky, says: "My wife had been sick for a long time, and her constitution was all broken down and she was unable to work. She was advised to use Brown's Iron Bitters, and found it to work like a charm. We would not now be with-out it for any consideration, as we consider it the best tonic in the world."

The Bad and Worthless

Are never imitated or counterfeited. This is especially true of a family medicine, and it is positive proof that the remedy imitated is of the highest value. As soon as it had been tested and proved by the whole world that Hop Bitters was the purest, best and most valuable family medicine on earth, many imitations sprung up and began to steal the notices in which the press and people of the country and expressed the nierits of H. B., and in every way trying to induce suffering invalids to use their stuff instead, expecting to make money on the credit and good name of H. B. Many others started nostrums put up in similar style to H. B., with variously devised names in which the word "Hop" or "Hops" were used in a way to induce people to believe they were the same as Hop Bitters. All such pretended remedies or cures, no matter what their style or name is, and especially those with the word "Hops" or "Hops" in their name or in any way connected with them or their name, are imitations or counterfeits. Beware of them. Touch none of them. Use nothing but genuine Hop Bitters, with a bunch or cluster of green Hops on the white label. Trust nothing else. Druggists and dealers are warned against dealing in imitations or counterfeits.

Feb 1, 1883 The Bad and Worthless rivaled for that class of diseases which to cure."
